THE BLENDING OF WORK AND HOME

Today's businesses employ a variety of methods to make everyone feel more comfortable at work, but there's one trend that is becoming universally accepted — the blending of work and home. As offices and work styles continue to evolve, people are spending less time at a desk and more time collaborating in places that offer casual comforts. HON brings the warmth and wellness of home settings into the office landscape, giving everyone a way to maximize productivity while relaxing comfortably.

Inviting Materials

People are drawn to a diverse set of materials, colors and textures found in nature. Natural wood grains. Seasonal colors. Organic patterns. Office workers are craving those touches to make the office feel more welcoming and relaxed. Here are four ways to bring touches of residential life into your workplace.

1

Tried & True

Sophisticated paint colors create an inviting and relaxing atmosphere.

2

All Mixed Up

Warm and natural materials layer together creating inspiring places where people want to work.

3

Wood Accents

The use of natural materials makes the work experience more human centered, creating a more familiar and authentic aesthetic.

4

Patterns Of Behavior

Geometric designs in upholstery can turn a sterile environment into a stimulating setting.

GOOD FOR PEOPLE. GOOD FOR BUSINESS.

By shaping your workplace around supporting wellness, you help everyone become healthier, productive and engaged. That's good for them, which is always better for your business. Studies show that taking a proactive approach to well-being translates to a meaningful increase in attendance, morale and productivity. Support healthier work styles for each workspace by incorporating ergonomic seating, height-adjustable worksurfaces and impromptu breakout settings that keep everyone comfortable and connected throughout the work day.

SIT. STAND. MOVE. REPEAT.

Unlike some sensationalized headlines suggest, the act of sitting is not killing us. Sitting for long periods with little movement and few changes in posture is, however, a risk factor for negative health implications. A healthy work environment starts with an advanced chair that allows for proper adjustment and healthy postures. Break up sitting durations with height-adjustable or standing workstations. Achieve dynamic movement by moving to comfortable third spaces and refreshing breakrooms that get everyone moving.

THE VALUE OF SITTING

- Reduces standing fatigue
- Transfers weight off feet and legs
- Stabilizes the upper body, making it the most-effective posture for detailed or highly-concentrative work

THE VALUE OF STANDING

- Burns calories
- Refreshes and re-energizes

THE VALUE OF MOVEMENT

- Increases blood flow
- Provides nourishment to biomechanical systems (e.g. muscles, tendons, and spine)
- Positive effects on comfort and concentration

THE ROLE OF MATERIALS IN THE WORKPLACE

We've all seen how some spaces within a workplace are more inviting and make people excited about coming to work. Often times, this is the result of an emotional connection people have with their personal work area, and this feeling can be influenced by carefully chosen palettes of colors and patterns. Talk to your local HON Connect dealer to achieve the right combination of inspired HON palettes that can sharpen focus, calm nerves and make the office feel more inviting.

Visit hon.com/fabrics-finishes to view more inspired color palettes.

THE VALUE OF FREE RANGE WORKPLACES

Live. Work. Play. In the past, these three activities rarely intersected, but the advent of technology, changing demographics and evolving work behaviors have altered the landscape of the workplace, both physically and emotionally. Today's workers have broken down traditional boundaries within the office, in their search for activity-based spaces that provide more choices with regards to process, technology, collaboration and interaction. Designing settings that give everyone more options for working on their own terms creates a free range work environment that buzzes with activity and diversity.

COMFORT WITH A CAPITAL C

Posture. Movement. Customization. These are a few design principals to explore when selecting a task chair. Because when it comes to employee well-being, comfort is crucial. Supporting the ergonomic and functional needs of all users throughout your space requires a flexible seating platform that allows everyone to personalize their level of support. HON chairs help everyone find more comfort, and the following terms will help you navigate through the process of customizing your seating selection. Stop by your local HON Connect dealer to take a chair for a test drive and see how it can improve your comfort and increase your productivity.

OPEN UP THE CHOICES

Innovative workplace strategies have revolutionized the way we work. While retrofitting an office to eliminate the need for dedicated workstations isn't a viable option for most companies, there has been an emphasis on outfitting the open plan to better support co-working, sharing and learning. The following four tips can help you create magnetic spaces for today's kinetic workforce.

FIND YOUR HAPPY PLACE

People work for more than a paycheck. For most, finding happiness, meaning and satisfaction at work is as important as the money. This largely comes from positive interactions with coworkers and a supportive culture, but the physical environment can also increase happiness and performance.* Incorporate the following four elements to help everyone find their happy place.

 According to the 2017 World Happiness Report, activities that increase social capital—such as support people receive from fellow workers—are connected to happiness and higher engagement.*
